Graham W. J. Beal has been the director, president and CEO of the Detroit Institute of Arts (DIA) since 1999. Since joining the DIA’s leadership team, Beal has continued to build the museum’s outstanding reputation and has strengthened relationships with some of the world’s most well-regarded institutions through loans and programming supported by the DIA’s unparalleled collection. He is currently overseeing a major capital campaign, as well as the first substantial renovation and construction at the museum in almost 40 years. He is also leading the complete reinstallation of the permanent collection in redesigned galleries which uses innovative techniques for engaging the general public. Beal has served on numerous art panels, and was elected to the Board of Trustees of the American Association of Museums in 2004.
